

Oops, She Did It Again

PHOTO: REX FEATURES

You'd think that her picture would be splashed on every salon wall by now: According to the Miami Herald, Foxy Brown was arrested on suspicion of assault and resisting arrest in Pembroke Pines, Florida, on February 15 after a disturbance at a beauty supply store. She was recently sentenced to anger management classes and three years of probation for assaulting two nail techs in New York City. This latest incident, which reportedly involved Brown throwing hair glue, was a violation of her probation, meaning the R&B songstress may face time in jail. Even if they did perform manicures in prison, we'd still recommend that nail techs pass on this client.

PHOTO: PAUL KOLNIK

Back in Blonde

Legally Blonde, the 2001 girl-power ode to everything pink and fabulous—including a day at the nail salon—is making the transition from film to Broadway. Legally Blonde the Musical opened in San Francisco on February 6, starring Laura Bell Bundy (already a veteran of several Broadway shows) as spoiled California girl turned Harvard law student Elle Woods. And naturally, the salon, which played a pivotal role in the movie, has made the leap to the stage as well. Scenic designer David Rockwell drew the plans for the salon, placing green-hued salon chairs and manicure tables against a sunny sky backdrop, giving Woods a place to relax and coach nail techs on how to woo a man on stage. The set, along with the rest of the show, has moved on to New York and opened on Broadway on April 29 after the month-long San Francisco run.

A Pregnant Pause?

With so many celebrities expecting visits from the stork lately, we're seeing a spate of "baby bump" pics on the red carpet—with mom-to-be hands lovingly protecting the bundles of joy, of course. This trend gives us the opportunity to check out these ladies' nails, and we're happy to report that most seem to be keeping up with their manicures during their pregnancies. A few new moms, such as Marcia Cross and Maggie Gyllenhaal, don't seem to do much of anything to their nails. Others, including Nancy O'Dell, Jaime Pressly and Jenna Elfman, keep their nails nice and neat while maintaining a trim length. But no one seems to be living up to the example set by the hottest mamas of all—Heidi Klum and Gwen Stefani—whose recent pregnancies didn't keep them from lacquering up their nails or wearing enhancements, showing that "mother" and "fashionable" are not mutually exclusive terms.

Clockwise from top: Maggie Gyllenhaal, Heidi Klum and Nancy O'Dell while pregnant; right: Gwen Stefani post-baby.